European Festival Huge Success

The Cleveland Local Unit's European Festival, on April 24, was the biggest and best yet, with approximately twice the attendance of last year's festival. Every seat in the hall where the event was held, which had a seating capacity of 335 persons at its tables, was sold out two weeks before the festival.

The performances by Saxon, Irish, Slovak, Scotch, and Ukrainian groups were excellent. The atmosphere was inspirational and uplifting. Everyone who attended responded enthusiastically. Ties to Cleveland's ethnic communities were strengthened, the Cleveland Unit had a net profit for its treasury, and the experience gained this year should enable the Unit to organize a festival three times as large next year.

IRISH dancers have become a favorite attraction at the Cleveland Unit's festivals.

SLOVAK dancers (above) and Scotch pipe-and-drum performers (below) participated in the Cleveland Unit's European Festivals for the second time this year. There also was a Slovak folk-song singer this year.

UKRAINIAN (above) and Saxon (below) dancers were new but very welcome additions to the European Festival this year. It is unlikely that so many pretty, little girls have ever before been under one roof in Cleveland at the same time. The Saxon, Irish, and Ukrainian dance groups were made up of children, mostly girls (the Irish dancers were exclusively girls), while the Scotch and Slovak performers were adults. All the performers made an outstandingly favorable impression on the spectators.

Many individual members of the Cleveland Unit collaborated to make the festival a success, but the greatest credit must go to Coordinator Erich Gliebe, who planned the event and did much of the work himself. A long-term project of Erich's has been to help the Alliance develop the capability to use European folk dance, folk song, and folk costume to strengthen our members' sense of ethnic identity and to build bridges to ethnically conscious non-members. Erich has urged other members to be not only spectators at these folk festivals, but also to become actively involved in folk activities: to learn to dance the folk dances of their ancestors by joining an appropriate folk dance group, to learn to play a traditional musical instrument, to become proficient in an ancestral language, etc.

There is no better time for such activity than the present, when the Jews are making their final push to stamp out every ethnicity except their own and usher in the multicultural New World Order.

Iran Radio Interviews

Dr. Pierce was interviewed twice in April by the English-language service of Iran Radio International, his second and third times to be interviewed by the Iranian government station. The subject of primary interest to the interviewer was the "Zionist" (that's what the Iranians say when they mean "Jewish") role in the war against Serbia and the American reaction to the war.

Internet Traffic Up

Our last BULLETIN report on our Internet traffic was in March 1998. During February 1998 the average number of visits to our www.natvan.com site was 5,900 per day.

During the first 28 days of April 1999 we averaged 8,465 visitors to www.natvan.com each day. That's up a little over 43 per cent in 14 months, or an average monthly rate of growth of just over 3 per cent.

Traffic varies quite a bit during the week. It spikes up as high as 14,000 visitors per day on Saturday, when the week's new American Dissident Voices program is added to the site, then typically falls back to between 7,000 and 9,000 on Monday.

We don't have a counter on our www.natall.com site, but the traffic there is presumably similar to that at www.natvan.com.

New Local Unit in Texas

A new Local Unit has been organized in Austin, Texas. Dr. Pierce asked member Jim Reid, a 37-year-old environmental engineer, to act as Local Unit Coordinator for the Austin Local Unit. Seven Austin-area members and two prospective members attended the new Unit's initial meeting on April 24.

JIM REID

Mr. Reid is married and has three children.

Leadership Conference

The Alliance held its eighth semi-annual Leadership Conference at the National Office on April 17. Fifty-five members attended. The purpose of the conferences is to provide an opportunity for new members who show leadership potential to meet one another and the National Office staff, and for the National Office staff to evaluate the members and discuss Alliance needs with them.

Attendance is by invitation only, but any member who would like to be invited to the next Leadership Conference should notify the National Office now.

Confederate Memorial Ceremony

Members in North Carolina will organize a Confederate Memorial Day celebration on May 15 to honor the Confederate dead. A wreath will be laid at the Confederate Memorial at the Alamance County courthouse in Graham, NC, at 2:00 PM. Following the wreath laying, members will have a cookout at a ski lodge owned by a member. Members, whether living in North Carolina or not, are invited to attend.

Correspondence

There has been an unusually large rate of increase in the number of letters received at the National Office during the month. This is due in part to public concern over the war against Serbia and the Alliance's commentary on the war. After the text and audio files for the American Dissident Voices program "Hands Off Yugoslavia" were posted at our two Internet sites on April 3, the National Office was receiving approximately 20 e-mail letters per hour. Nearly all of this mail was positive and supportive, much of it strongly so. Here are a few samples:

Your "Hands Off Yugoslavia" program was well done and, as usual, right on the mark.

However, although there is some truth in stereotypes, I think your constant reference to VFW and American Legion types as "yahoos" is a bit off the mark. Take it from this American Legionnaire and current member of our glorious imperial military forces, in my American Legion post there is not a great wave of support for Mr. Clinton's current example of international thuggery. Far from it. In fact, when I awoke on the day after the bombing started I felt ashamed to put my uniform on and report for duty. What has this nation become? All those who gave their lives and blood for our ideals must be turning in their graves.

History teaches us the following: America shall not remain the dominant military and economic power forever. When we fall they will come and slaughter us, and we will have deserved it. I don't want this for my country. I don't want it for any other country. I want peace in my nation and in theirs.

Keep up the good work.

—Stanley S.

I can't believe you're saying these things over public media! You obviously say whatever you think. I can't describe how gratifying and exhilarating it is to hear my own private inklings and conclusions so clearly and definitively substantiated. I really and seriously hope that there are many more unhyphenated Americans like myself enjoying this same experience of vindication. Man, it's encouraging to find that I'm not alone after all. More power to you. Tell it!

—T.P.

As a former Marine I have been following the events in Yugoslavia with great interest. I can hardly find the words to express my total disgust with my government's actions. We have become a nation of terrorists: "Sign this treaty, or we'll bomb you to hell." I hate to admit it, but I find myself rooting for the Serbs. The American public are surely morons if they never expected Clinton's ultimate plan was to send in ground troops. He is a known liar, and he keeps on lying. Isn't it ironic that the leaders and the public that are clamoring for troops on the ground are the ones who have never served and never will be the ones risking their lives.

—Sam T.

I have one small disagreement with your thoughts on Yugoslavia/Serbia/Kosovo. The Kosovar Albanians don't want to live in a happily multicultural Yugoslavia again. They want their own country. Everyone wants his own country. Pretty soon bald guys with a limp will have a homeland, and many sovereign nations will be only slightly larger than my backyard. Is this a bad thing? . . .

I believe that what the Turks and the Iranians are doing to the Kurds is equally deserving of intervention. I also believe that Israel is a dangerous little jack-in-the-box that's going to pop up and bite a lot of people on the ass someday.

—Albert C. [Canada]

As usual, Dr. Pierce has hit the nail on the head. As a former military officer with Joint Staff experience, I certainly can see that ethnic Albanians are the excuse, not the reason, for the current adventurism in one of the most dangerous flashpoints in the world. . . .

I suspect that this new war is one of annihilation against the Serbs, who wish to run their own country without outside UN/NATO dictation. Under the guise of preventing ethnic cleansing, Clinton and his cohorts are willing to conduct ethnic cleansing on a much larger scale. To further his insane "humanistic" fantasy he is willing to risk a major European or world war and the blood of European and American soldiers. That our planners in Washington did not provide for even basic sanitation and health care for the flood of refugees that any moron could have anticipated shows how much they care for the Kosovo Albanians. Where are the Joint Chiefs and other Defense Department advisors to the President? Are they so afraid of losing their pensions that they fail in their most basic duty? It's sickening. We deserve to have our asses kicked real hard. It's only a matter of time before it happens.

—Tom

I believe that you are right on the money. I am retired military: Navy and Army, officer and enlisted, duty in Vietnam and Somalia, Special Forces and advisory duty. . . . So they are sending Albanians back to Albania. Could that be like California sending illegal immigrants back to Mexico, despite the fact that they've lived in California for many years? It looks like Slick is trying to outdo the Russians in Afghanistan: i.e., see how many more losses we can take before we figure out it's a lost cause.

Keep up the good work. The best support our troops could get is to be pulled out of there and kept out.

—Frank in fun-filled Fayetteville, North Carolina

My compliments on a great program! It resonated with me. It is completely outrageous that we as a people again should be manipulated into bombing and killing White Europeans. I fear that if the Washington criminals have their way they will mount a ground invasion of Kosovo, which will cause the predictable cataclysmic Serb response. . . .

It seems criminal in the extreme to bomb Serbs in order to help establish a militant and terrorist Islamic state right in Europe proper that will have its predictable destabilizing and destructive influence. Unless of course, that's exactly what they want.

—Mark

I salute you! My message comes from Czech Republic. What happens now makes me full of hate for everything coming from America. I see young, brainwashed, multi-culti-loving American tourists on the streets of Prague, and I would like to kick them all. While they have smiles on their faces their fathers are bombing my racial brothers and sisters in Serbia. My friends and I made some demonstrations against American policy in Europe. When we marched through the streets of the Old City shouting anti-American and pro-Serb slogans, one of these typical American tourists said, "Crazy teenagers!"

Dr. Pierce, you are right when you talk about yahoos and lemmings supporting the kosher U.S. government. But I know where my hatred belongs. In spite of my anger at brainwashed Yankees, I know who is guilty: the eternal Jew, who started all of the fratricidal wars of Europeans in this century. Not God but we must punish this crime of the millennium. Thank you for your inspiration.

—Filip V.

First of all, anything that guy presently in the White House has to say or do is an abomination in my eyes. But I believe that the stupid people of America deserve him. The disgrace of his impeachment and trial hasn't even gotten cold yet, and people believe and trust him with his war against Yugoslavia. I'm so discouraged with Americans today. The amount of stupidity, blindness, and ignorance is just overwhelming and disconcerting.

I agree with what you said about Yugoslavia and its sovereignty. I'm tired of Clinton using the taxpayers' money for all these "peacekeeping" missions, while putting us in danger of retaliation from our mounting number of enemies. The U.S.A. has become a global bully and policeman for NATO, and I don't approve of or like it one bit. All I have to say is, God help us.

—Rose from Georgia

And there are hundreds more positive letters this month. There also were a few hate letters, and for the sake of balance one is excerpted here:

Do you forget that the very God we give worship to on Sundays as well as the very Bible we read are in fact of Jewish origin? It was only by the death of God's son Jesus Christ, a son of a Jewish carpenter, that the Gentiles can be given salvation. For you to constantly bash the Jewish community is in fact to speak out against God. Whether or not you want to believe it, the Jewish people are God's Chosen People. There is no way around it. All of those who persecute the Jewish people will in one way or another be dealt with by God. . . .

Commentary by Dr. Pierce:

Redefining Patriotism

The yahoos at the VFW clubs certainly will not understand this, but in fact Madeleine Albright's war against Yugoslavia has profound implications for the relationship between the citizens of a modern state and their government, and for the relationship between civilians and soldiers. These implications are discussed in depth in the American Dissident Voices broadcast scheduled for May 8, but for the sake of members who will not hear that broadcast, it is summarized here.

Prior to the 20th century the concept of patriotism was generally understood to be the "family" feeling—a blend of affection and loyalty—one had for one's fatherland, the land of one's ancestors. A related concept was that of nationalism, the family feeling that one had for one's nation: which is to say, for one's people. The etymology of the word implied that one's nation was one's extended biological family: everyone in the nation was related by birth. If a nation had occupied a given geographical territory for a long time, then the two concepts were practically interchangeable.

Patriotism was much more than an intellectual construct; it was closer to an instinct. It was bred into a people because it had survival value. A tribe which could depend on the loyalty of its members was much more likely to survive than one which could not. Thus also the strong taboo against treason.

When North America was settled by Europeans in the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries, the meanings of patriotism and nationalism were strained a bit. Fairly soon, however, the descendants of immigrants from Germany, Ireland, Scotland, England, Norway, Poland, Italy, and other European countries developed a new sense of patriotism. There was enough similarity among the European immigrants to North America that one might even say that a new nation came into being, and with it a feeling of affection and loyalty for America and the American people. There were exceptions, of course. While most Swedish, French, and other European immigrants soon transferred their loyalty from the land of their ancestors in Europe to the new land in America, non-European groups as a rule did not. Gypsies still thought of themselves first and foremost as Gypsies. And Jews remained Jews, with a loyalty only to the Jewish people, wherever they might live.

This transfer of loyalty on the part of European immigrants gave America the cohesion it needed to grow and prosper. Unfortunately, it also provided a handle for the Jews and their collaborators to use in manipulating public opinion in America and setting America against Europe in two fratricidal and horribly destructive world wars in this century. Patriotism is a powerful force even when it is misguided. Governments can use it for purposes which are not in the interests of the people. Absent the Jews there still can be bad governments and unnecessary wars, but no government is likely to deliberately and consistently work against the interests of its own people over an extended period. The Jewish presence in America in the 20th century, however, has resulted in patriotism being used against the interests of the American people in a systematic way, at least through the Vietnam war.

Incidentally, recently published statistics from the Vietnam war provide powerful support for the suspicion which always has existed that, though Jews may manipulate the patriotic feelings of the rest of us, they themselves retain their own Jewish patriotism and do not share our patriotism. If one counts Stars of David in military cemeteries from the Second World War, one finds them conspicuously underrepresented in the fields of crosses.

In Stolen Valor (Verity Press, 1998), a study of the Vietnam war and its veterans, B.G. Burkett and Glenna Whitley cite a 1992 study of Department of Defense records by Massachusetts Institute of Technology Professor Arnold Barnett and West Point's Captain Timothy Stanley which provided much more precise data. Draft-age Jews in America, it turns out, suffered losses in Vietnam at a rate less than one fifth their proportion of the population. This was not simply a matter of rich boys avoiding service while poor boys got killed: young White men from high-income families suffered approximately the same overall casualty rate as low-income Whites. Although some high-income Whites avoided the draft as university students, Whites from high-income families made up most of the officer corps, which suffered a disproportionately high casualty rate, and the average death rate for high-income Whites was nearly the same as for low-income Whites.

For Jews, however, the difference is striking: making up slightly over 2.5 per cent of the population, Jews accounted for only 0.46 per cent of Vietnam KIAs. This remarkable difference reflects a remarkable difference in attitudes between Jews and Whites.

Even as late as the Vietnam war, with Bill Clinton and his Jewish and leftist friends demonstrating for the Viet Cong, traditional American patriotism remained a powerful force. Most young White men still looked on military service in time of war as a patriotic duty. Phrases such as "serving your country" were still taken seriously. There was great respect for military heroism and military sacrifice. And although many Vietnam veterans were offended by being called "baby killers" and the like by leftist demonstrators in the United States, the general feeling in the White population remained that men in military "service" deserved the support of everyone on the home front. There still was the feeling that America's armed forces were "defending America."

Now we have a quite different situation, even though the yahoos won't realize that for a while yet. In Madeleine Albright's war against Serbia there's not even a pretense that America's armed forces are "defending America" or performing some sort of "service" for the American people which deserves moral support from the home front. The politicians may still mouth hypocritical slogans about "supporting our boys" in order to keep the votes of the yahoos, but no one with a brain takes such slogans seriously any longer. It is clear that America's armed forces have become a purely mercenary operation. Joining the armed forces these days is an equal-opportunity employment choice, not a patriotic act. Soldiers are paid to enforce the will of the New World Order crowd, not to defend the American people, and because of that they deserve no more support or respect from civilians than the members of any other occupational group: bus drivers or construction workers, say. If an F-117 is shot down, its replacement cost comes out of our tax dollars, but that's also true of the government's emergency relief activity after a hurricane or a flood. There just isn't any emotional dimension to it.

And when it comes to a conflict between American military personnel fighting under NATO or United Nations command on one side and Serbian military personnel on the other side, there no longer is a moral obligation to cheer for the Americans. They are not defending us; we don't have to support them. They're not even on "our" side any more than the Serbs are. And at least the Serbs have an all-White army.

As I said, this is really a big and important change in the nature of things. The Jews always were impatient with our old-fashioned sense of patriotism. It gave them a handle for manipulating us, but they always were a little afraid of it, always a little worried that it might turn against them someday. So now they've changed the equation of patriotism. Now they've dropped the pretense. That's one more step in the remaking of America in the Jewish image, and judging from what some of the more reckless Jews have been saying recently, they feel pretty good about it. At least, they don't have to apologize any longer for the sort of statistics I just cited on Vietnam KIAs. Now they can simply cite that as proof that they're smarter than we are.

My view of the matter is that they have moved a little prematurely on this and eventually will come to regret it bitterly. Based in instinct as it is, patriotism cannot be gotten rid of so easily. They have succeeded in invalidating the moral contract which used to exist between America's soldiers and her civilians, just as they invalidated the concept of popular democracy when they put together a majority coalition of welfare rabble, non-Whites, homosexuals, feminists, and ball-game fans under their control. But the patriotic instinct is still there, and it will find a new way of expressing itself.

As for us, we still need to move with caution. We don't want to give the yahoos an excuse for denouncing us as "traitors" or "commies" for not "supporting our boys." At the same time, however, we must recognize that the old contract is broken, and that perceptive and moral citizens can be made to understand that now. When I said on my May 1 ADV broadcast that decent people everywhere can hope that the Serbs will use one of their submarines to sink a U.S. aircraft carrier in the Adriatic, I received some shocked and indignant responses—as I expected I would. One or two listeners suggested I "got carried away" by my hatred for the Clinton government. For these listeners, who otherwise have been in almost complete agreement with my broadcasts, the old taboo was still in effect. We still must "support our boys," even when they are taking orders from Madeleine Albright.

It is that conservative mind-set on the part of much of the public that we want to take care not to offend any more than necessary. But among ourselves we must be a bit less conservative. The U.S. armed forces have been brainwashed and trained for some time to be used against rebellious U.S. citizens. Don't worry about the legalities of the matter; they will be used by the Jews and their allies against Americans whenever the Jews feel threatened. They are being used now to kill people whose thinking is a lot closer to ours than the thinking of most non-member Americans. They really are a mercenary force, and their leaders would just as soon use them against White Americans or Europeans as against Haitians or Somalis.

We still have members in the armed forces, and we will recruit more in the future. But the U.S. armed forces as a whole no longer are "our boys."
